Switzerland

Something is really going to be done to modify the designs of, or perhaps even replace the new Swiss stamps. Mr. Eplattenier, the designer of the new symbolical figure type (10c., 12c., etc.) has submitted six new designs to the Federal authorities. The designs are various as regards choice of subjects: some are still figure of Helvetia and others consist partly of the Swiss arms.

Other designs have been submitted by Messrs. Benziger, of Einsiedeln. This firm will be remembered as being the printers of the recently issued International Reply Coupons. Their designs were all for a large stamp, about the size of the Jamestown Exhibition stamps of the United States. Unfortunately this idea is no good as in 1906 the Federal authorities decided that all stamps should in the future be surface-printed, the work to be done in the Federal Mint. Messrs. Benzigers' designs were only suitable for production by line engraving.

from the others in that the paper between the stamps is about entirely cut out in a straight line of small holes, mostly round, sufficeint paper being left between to hold the stamps together. These sections of paper may be termed bridges or the teeth of perforation, and are the projections seen on a stamp separated from the sheet.

There are various styles of perforation, vis:- fine perforation, small holes with cuts close together: rough perforation, jagged or not clean cut holes: coarse perforation, large holes and teeth far apart: compound perforation; various stamps are issued with different perforation on the sides for instance a stamp may be listed as perforated 12 x 12¼, invarably the first guage given is the one on the top of the stamp.

Great care should be taken in guaging the perforation of a stamp, as in most cases it is a guide to the date of issue and by this distinction in most cases can be determined the value of the stamp.

An accurate guage for measuring perforations is nescesary to all collectors, and for the present we will refrain from going into the mathematical principles of the guage.
